The Son of God

Lesson for January 16, 1955

THE churches composing the World Council have set up one theological condition for membership, and in spite of efforts to induce them to change, they have stuck to it. No church can be admitted that does not acknowledge Jesus Christ "as God and Savior." Now when Jesus is called God outright, the church is saying something the Bible rarely says. Furthermore, it can be confusing to say this. The church universal has never meant to say that Jesus is all the God there is, or that Jesus is identical with God. For God exists in three persons (as the church expresses it), and Christ is only one person. Christ is both God and man, but God is not man at all. And yet the church universal, and churches in particular, cling to the statement "Jesus is God," partly because they would rather make the mistake of saying too much than too little about Christ, and partly because this does express their real faith.

Dr. Foreman

Equal With God

Laying all technical theology aside, and speaking as plainly as possible, things can be said about Christ, which the Bible teaches, and which the church believes, and which put together come out where the church stands—on the deity of Christ. First, Jesus himself called himself regularly the "Son of God," and even his enemies could see that that meant placing himself on an equality with God. Paul in the New Testament speaks of Christ as the "image of the invisible God;" Hebrews says he "bears the very stamp of God's nature." As was said here last week, Christ is our true picture of God, our best way of knowing what God is like. Now if Christ is "equal with God" we should expect the church to worship him—and so it does. Prayers are offered to him directly as well as to the Father in his name. The Doxology sings, "Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost," and many other hymns and songs are actually prayers to Christ. ("Jesus Savior, Pilot Me;" "Rock of Ages;" "More love to Thee, O Christ," "Make me a captive, Lord," "Fairest Lord Jesus,"—and any reader can think of many more.)

The Mind of God

Second, Jesus himself spoke of his words as being not his own but those of the Father who sent him. This was a vivid way of saying that he knew what was in God's mind, he knew God's attitudes and intentions, how God felt and what he planned to do. Now it is true that there had been prophets who spoke by inspiration and who brought the Word of God to the people. But a famous living theologian has put the difference between the prophets and Jesus this way: The Word of God came through the prophets—but Jesus Christ was the Word. The prophets were at one remove from God, and in Christ there is not even "one remove" from the Highest. The Sermon on the Mount gives perhaps the most striking illustration of this. Often in that sermon you find the words, "Ye have heard that it was said" (and here Jesus quotes some passage from the Old Testament) "but I say unto you" (and here Jesus gives a teaching which may be radically different from the Old Testament). In short Jesus set up his own teaching as actually above the accepted "Word of God." What greater claim—?

The Authority of Christ

The practical question is: How seriously do Christians take this doctrine of the Deity of Christ? The churches officially believe it; and yet church members act as if Jesus had never spoken, or as if his opinion were only one man's opinion, worth no more than the average. Christians might well remember Jesus' own question: "Why do you call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" It is one thing to sing hymns to Christ on Sundays, another and harder thing to follow his teachings on weekdays. The test of whether a person really believes in the deity of our Lord is not in what he says about it but in what he does about it. We might even risk this proposition: A person who shrinks back from saying "Jesus is God" and yet believes that in any case Jesus is always right, comes nearer to truly accepting the deity of Christ

STOP CATTLE LICE NOW, SPECIALIST ADVISES

Guard against the winter build-up of cattle lice.

That 's the advice of VPI entomologists who warn that the louse problem is worst in winter and early spring.

Inspect cattle now rather than waiting until aniamls rub bare patches on necks and backs and lose in weight and milk production. The experienced eye can detect the presence of lice by noting their effect on the animal and the condition of the hair.

Spraying cattle thoroughly with methoxychlor, rotenone, or lindane will kill lice. The specialists recommend 1 to 3 gallons for each mature animal. The smaller amount is adequate for short-haired animals.

To mix the sprays, use ½ pound of 50% methoxychlor in 6 gallons of water or 8 pounds in 100 gallons of water. It takes two ounces of powdered 5% derris-root or cube-root rotenone in 6 gallons of water to kill lice, or 2 pounds in 100 gallons. One ounce of 25% lindane powder in 6 gallons of water, or 1 pound in 100 gallons of water, is recommended.

In most cases it is necessary to re-treat in 15 days since the treatment isn't entirely effective against louse eggs.

Applications made in January should solve the louse problem for the winter and spring. A hand or compressed air sprayer is satisfactory for treating a few animals, but a high pressure power sprayer is needed for larger herds.

A 10% dust of methoxychlor or a commercial mixture of rotenone and sulfur dust is satisfactory if rubbed thoroughly into the hair. A 10% DDT dust can be used on animals if their milk isn't used by humans.

Use the materials and dosage recommended, and don't experiment with other materials, or increase the dosage over that given.

Big Interest in Grass Despite Long '54 Drouth

A high ratio of Virginia farmers are still talking grass, in spite of the disheartening drouth of the past two years.

This is pointed up in the reports from counties where, although many of their activities were curtailed by the dry weather, seeding, fertilization and management of pastures was big news in '54.

Especially notable achievements have been in those counties which participated in the pasture contest sonducted by the VPI Agricultural Extension Service and sponsored by the National Fertilizer Association.

The Association donated five silver trophies, one to the county conducting the best pasture program in each administrative district of the Extension Service.

Receiving the trophies were: Charlotte, Gloucester, Mecklenburg, Roanoke and Prince William.

Runners-up in each of the districts were: southeast, Nottoway; and Isle of Wight; northeast, Richmond; northern, Madison and Culpeper; central, Cumberland and Henry; and southwest, Washington and Lee.

The top counties had several common denominators. The pasture program was generally steered by a county committee. Education of the farmers, through farm meetings, office calls, distribution of leaflets and bulletins, tours, meetings, press and radio, received strong emphasis. Serving on the county committees, in addition to farmers, were representatives of civic groups and business.

John F. Shoulders, associate agronomist at VPI, computes that over 70,000 farmers were contacted with information on grassland farming, through individual visits, tours, and meetings in Virginia last year. Some 22,000 acres of alfalfa were seeded, and 150,000 acres of pasture were renovated or seeded.

Stressed throughout the state was the use of sudan grass for supplemental summer grazing, and small grain or rye grass and crimson clover for supplemental late fall and early spring grazing.

Shoulders also reports that over 21,000 soil samples were made on pasture land—a prerequisite to wise use of lime and fertilizer.

Plans are being made for a liar program in 1955. Proper agement, aimed at a 12-month program, will receive top emph Shoulders said.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad but loving remembrance of our dear mother, Mrs. Lillie C. Drinkard, who departed this life one year ago today, January 10, 1954.

January brings sad memories
Of a loved one gone to rest,
It has been one year
Since God called you home.

The old home now is broken,
No longer there you roam,
God gave us a wonderful mother,
One of the world's very best.

Not gone from memory
Not gone from love;
But to a heavenly home above.
And while you rest in peaceful sleep
Your memory, mother, will always keep.

—Sadly missed by Her Children.
